Doctor of Physical Therapy (D.P.T.)

Physical therapy encompasses examination, treatment, and instruction of human beings to detect, assess, prevent, correct, alleviate, and limit physical disability, movement dysfunction, bodily malfunction, and pain from injury, disease and any other bodily and mental conditions. Within these areas, physical therapists may offer clinical services, administer and manage practice settings, participate in research, and serve as consultants and educators.

The Curriculum

The curriculum plan includes up to 55 required courses. During the first year students build on their prerequisite coursework through courses in the basic sciences and begin clinical courses in the area of general practice and musculoskeletal areas. Additionally, students begin core courses in research design, methodology, and statistics. The first year ends with the first full-time clinical experience. In the second year students continue with clinical courses in both the musculoskeletal and neuro-rehabilitation areas. They progress into courses focusing on special populations. During the first quarter of the second year students are introduced to the two final project options and choose a track to continue on for the remainder of the curriculum at the end of the second year fall quarter. Students can choose the research track where they complete a research project or the evidence-based practice track where they complete a capstone project. The Professional Practice/PT Seminar course meets during the fall and winter quarters of first and second year. During the third year, students continue work on their research or capstone projects while completing four full-time internships and participating in virtual grand rounds.
