Introduction:

Alice Patterson, born Alice Mary Smith in 1862, was a key figure in the early development of Osteopathy. Having known A.T. Still as her childhood family doctor, she enrolled in the first class of the American School of Osteopathy (ASO) in 1893. At the time, she was already an educated woman and a mother; her husband was Henry Eldorus Patterson, the first secretary of the ASO. For three years following her graduation in 1895, Alice took up several faculty positions at the ASO, including lecturer of obstetrics and gynecology, clinical instructor, and first assistant of the maternity hospital. She also contributed articles to the early Journal of Osteopathy and developed an osteopathic cure for gall stones.

Aided by the endorsement of U. S. Senator Joseph Foraker, the Pattersons opened a highly successful practice in Washington, D.C. Henry died in 1902, but Alice continued to work as a physician for 25 more years, and kept the Patterson name for the rest of her life. From 1908 to 1916, she was married to George H. Shibley, a sociologist, writer, and D.O. A wealthy socialite and a leader in the osteopathic movement, Alice served as the President of the District of Columbia Osteopathic Association for several years and became the first Vice President of the American Osteopathic Association in 1918. She died of heart failure in 1928, at the home of her daughter in Fort Sill, Oklahoma.
