New Record for Pleasure at Rocky Mountain Conclave

For sociability, recreation and pleasure, nothing in osteopathic annals has ever equaled the Sixth Annual meeting of the American Osteopathic Association, held August 14-19 at the Brown Palace hotel, Denver, Colorado.

Although there were apprehensions in advance that the heat might be unbearable on such a long journey, more than 300 signed the roster. Most of the old "war horses" of the profession were there. Also many new ones.

Father A. T. Still was present and made a speech at the opening session. This feature was worth the price of admission to many doctors who had not heard "Pappy" voice since leaving school, and to still others who had never before met the founder of our science.

The Pacific coast delegation was a strong and active one, and the profession had the pleasure of making the acquaintance of a number of men and women who have been prominent in advancing osteopathic interests on the coast but who have not been seen at previous meetings of the national association.

The Denver and Colorado Osteopaths gave us all the time of our lives, beyond a doubt, and too much praise cannot be netted out to them, one and all. That the whole profession of the city and state was well organized and had labored as a unit for our entertainment was clearly evident, since the net results of the program enacted can only follow the united work of many heads and hands. The reception committee as named comprised "all members of the Colorado Osteopathic Association," of which body Dr. John T. Bass acted as president and Dr. Nettie Hubbard Bolles, secretary. Such other "high privates" in the ranks as Doctors N. Allen Bolles, George W. Perrin, Hasseltine A. Barson, L. S. Brown, Elizabeth C. Bass, Burt D. Mason, Nellie T. McElhenny, Dr. M. Wood, Dr. L. C. Crumb, Charles C. Reid, as well as members of their families—all residents of the city—were on duty early and late, administering to guest-comfort, comfort-hospitality. One and all deserve our thanks, nor can we omit from special mention Miss Ettie Bass and Mrs. George W. Perrin, who were in the thick of the fray of entertainment throughout the week.

Speaking of the entertainment accorded our delegates, it is fitting to compliment the management of the Brown Palace hotel, also, for the ideal arrangements of this hostelry for the entertainment of a convention such as ours. No better site for a convention of several hundred people can be found in the union. The auditorium, committee rooms and clinic rooms are ample and well arranged, light, airy, free from noise and dirt, and the delegates who possess this delightful retreat a mile above sea-level find themselves sole occupants of a little world of their own, quite apart from the mad crowd in the lobby and streets beneath, where all may get well and personally acquainted, as it is not possible to do at most of the hotels one visits.

Our thanks to the management of the Brown for one of the pleasantest conventions that the profession has yet held.

Side Trips Delighted Visitors

The most conspicuous difference between this convention and others consisted in the side trips which were taken to take advantage of the various canons and upon or across the range. Many delegations came by way of Colorado Springs and Manitou Springs, and stopped over there en route to the convention. Most everybody who came west, went home that way of course, and had this fun afterwards.

Two journeys were made to the top of the range by the osteopathic crowd in a body—and jolly trainloads they made, too. One trip was up road which, when completed, will shorten the distance 200 miles between Denver and Salt Lake. The journey's end: Osteopathic range in snowballing and were photographed above timber line. After a rest of another day a second journey was taken on the Colorado & Southern rail trail to Silver Plume via the celebrated Georgetown loop. This trip is world-famous and needs no eulogy and was alone worth the trip from below oceans. Convention work was finished up each morning on the days when the visitors took these official journeys.

Other unofficial journeys were taken plentifully—to Eldora up the "Switzerland Trail"—which has been completed from Sunset in Boulder canyon only this year, and which, all in all, presents the finest scenery of the range—if comparisons were the test of a little journey enjoyed after the meeting by many Osteopaths was the "Short Line" (Colorado & Southern) from Colorado Springs to Cripple Creek, which also bears the distinction of common repute of being "the finest trip in the Rockies." There are many of these fine trips, however—all so magnificent as to admit of no rivalry between them, each being different. Lucky, indeed, was the Osteopath who could spend two weeks or so in this delightful country—as many of them did—and combine attendance at the A. O. A. meeting with a refreshing and delightful outing. It will be many a day before the A. O. A. has another meeting, at which the members and visitors will have equal opportunities for pleasure. After all is said, there is but one Colorado.

Politics and Elections as Seen at the Denver Meeting

ELECTIONS, as usual, were not marked by any fervid politics this year at the Denver meeting, and so far from parties or electioneering for friends developing, it can be said truthfully that nobody knew a moment before election who were to be placed in nomination for the various offices. A nominating committee, comprising Drs. C. C. Teall, Howard T. Crawford, Nettie Hubbard Bolles, Ella D. Stiff, W. W. Steede, Ernest Sisson, Percy H. Woodall and Janet Kerr was instructed to frame up two regular tickets and present them for balloting.

It seems to have been the belief that a seasoned committee could throw over the situation and make better selections than might result if nominations were left entirely to chance and individual friends. Two tickets were duly presented, either one of which seemed wholly acceptable and any chance combination of whose respective members would prove equally felicitous. Some members evinced a desire to present independent nominations from the floor, but President McConnell pointed out that the resolution appointing the nominating committee instructed it to present two regular tickets so as to afford a choice to voters, and that further nominations would not be in order. So no independent nominations were made.

The following are the officials for the ensuing year:

President, Dr. A. L. Evans, Chattanooga, Tennessee.
First Vice President, Dr. John T. Bass, Denver, Colorado.
Second Vice President, Dr. Lena Creswell, San Diego, California.
Secretary, Dr. Harry Linden Chiles, Auburn, New York (re-elected).
Assistant Secretary, C. A. Upton, St. Paul, Minnesota (re-elected).
Treasurer, M. F. Hulett, Columbus, Ohio (re-elected).
Three-Year Trustees: Dr. Cora B. Tasker, Los Angeles; Dr. C. B. Atchen, Omaha, Neb., and Dr. T. L. Ray, Fort Worth, Texas.

Dr. Leslie E. Cherry, of Milwaukee, Wis., was at the head of the second regular ticket. No sooner had nominations for the presidency been made than Dr. Cherry took the floor to ask the withdrawal of his own name and move the election...

tion of Dr. Evans by unanimous voice. He was ruled out of order by President McConnell, as the voters presumably wanted a little run for their money, and the very substantial vote polled by the unwilling candidate proved decidedly complimentary, especially as his successful rival was one of the most hard-working, deserving and popular veterans of the organization.

President McConnell, known to the profession as editor of The Journal of the American Osteopathic Association from its founding to the present time, to need introduction or eulogy. His good work of the past and present speaks for him, and from his close knowledge of the work of the association and profession in its every department of activity, it is well assured that his regime will carry on the work of Dr. McConnell's administration, with which Dr. Evans has been so closely identified, without the loss of a single foot-pound of energy.

Everyone has felt that it was only a question of time when Dr. Evans would be honored by election to the presidency. He is one of a circle of veteran workers for the science, profession and association, including other such men as Doctors Cherry, Tasker, Link, Bolles and Ellis, who have not been so honored, and whom it is generally believed to be only a question of time until the presidential lightning officially strikes them. They will not say that any of these worthies has out his lightning-rod for the nomination, for that would not be true. They are not the type of men to seek office, while, by an unspoken law in A. O. A., statescraft, "office must uniformly seek the man." And the person who would strive to have himself elected would certainly be snowed under by an avalanche of disapproval. But Dr. Evans has been marked in professional opinion for preferment some time, and while his name had not been talked of to any extent for election this year it seemed like a matter of course as soon as the nominating committee had been heard from, and his election evoked generous enthusiasm from the rank and file of association workers. On motion of Dr. Cherry it was made unanimous as soon as the formal ballot was taken.

President Evans will retain the editorship of the Association Journal in addition to his executive responsibilities, which is said to have had a precedent in the case of Dr. George M. Gould, at one time president of the American Medical Association and editor of its journal.

My antiseptic treatment for skin diseases has been used by over one-half of the Osteopaths in practice. It is a high-class, strictly ethical product, and is made up in a variety of ways and strengths according to the needs of the case.

The formula is given to anyone using the preparation if he desires it.

I have given an absolutely guarantee in over 500 cases and never made but one refund. If you will mention "The O. P."

Then why shouldn't they have been re-elected?

And as for Treasurer M. F. Hulett—of course, also! Who else would know so well how to collect the association's dollars? Surely his years' experience has taught him some useful tricks about how to get the membership to pay its dues promptly and keep in good standing. The members thought this so strongly that our Uncle Mack was re-elected triumphantly, and so there will be no change in the financial policy of the A. O. A. in the coming year. Pay your dues early and avoid the rush!

The three nominees for trusteeships who could not be incorporated in the governing board of the A. O. A. solely because there was only room for three of the six named were Drs. Ord Ledyard Sands, E. W. Colley and W. B. Meacham.

ASSOCIATED COLLEGE AFFAIRS

These officers were elected by the Associated Colleges of Osteopathy for the ensuing year: President, Dr. James B. Littlejohn, of the American College of Osteopathic Medicine and Surgery; First Vice President, Dr. Howard T. Crawford, of the Massachusetts College of Osteopathy; Second Vice President and Treasurer, Dr. Clinton A. Whiting, of the Pacific College of Osteopathy.

The Central College of Osteopathy at Kansas City, having graduated its first class, made application to the Associated Colleges for recognition. The Associated Colleges voted to admit the new institution, but it was presently pointed out that the laws require a candidate school to be endorsed by the "Educational Committee" of the A. O. A. before it can be accepted into the Associated Colleges. Central College had applied to Dr. E. E. Booth, chairman of this committee in June, it is said, for examination and a "character," but it was then too late to give the committee opportunity to make the examination. The invitation will likely be renewed this fall, said President A. L. McKenzie, and it is believed in Associated College ranks that the candidate institution will prove acceptable and duly take enrollment as one of the "sister colleges."

The College Professor and the Lame Back

The College Professor and the Lame Back

ONE of our well known professors in the University of Iowa came to me recently with an old copy of "Osteopathic Health" and engaged in the following colloquy:

"Have you a lame back?" says little magazine.

"I have," says I.

"Have you ever consulted a physician about it?" it asks.

"I have," says I.

"What did he tell you?" it continues.

"Nothing," says I.

"Are you satisfied?" it asks.

"I am not," I reply.

"Then are you ready to consult an accredited Osteopath," it persists, who can give you a sensible reason for your lame back, with its sore spots, and relieve the same, with proper treatment?"

"You bet I am, says I—and here I am, Doctor! Now, honest, do you really think you can cure a very bad lame back?"

The professor was cured and has become an enthusiastic supporter of Osteopathy. He is but one of many friends whom I have secured by using "Osteopathic Health." My perpetual gratitude to the little field magazine that "pulls patients!"

Fraternally,

Arthur Still Craig, D. O.

A Change in Publishing the Official Year Book

The trustees of the American Osteopathic Association have been dissatisfied with the service rendered in the Osteopathic Year Book for 1905, which was published under contract by a Minneapolis firm. Complaints have been general on the part of members that the directory is grossly inaccurate, while it was months late in making its appearance, and there was widespread failure on the part of members in addition, to receive the copies due them and paid for by the association.

The need of an accurate, strictly up-to-date directory has been felt by all of us for several years, and this want has been growing stronger every year. The failure of those who had this work in hand to satisfy the demands of the profession is particularly galling to the bidders to come forward and offer to do the work next year. The award fell to The Osteopathic Publishing Company, of Chicago, publishers of this newspaper, and the editor will at once set about preparing and issuing the Official Osteopathic Directory for 1906 which, with the cooperation of individual osteopaths throughout the land, as well as all those in official positions and the schools, he will make as nearly complete, accurate and reliable as it is possible to do in a profession numbering more than four thousand people, many of them migratory.

We must have an accurate year book for 1906, fellow osteopaths! It cannot be produced without your efficient editorial collaboration. You are urged to write the editor at once and report all errors which you have observed in the present volume. Put “Directory Dept.” on your envelope when writing us on this business.

This new year book will appear not later than February 1, 1906, and, if efficient editorial work can be guaranteed within a shorter time, the trustees of the A. O. A. and the editor alike desire to have the directory appear by the first day of January.

Presidents and secretaries of all our associations are hereby appointed Assistant Editors of the new year book, and are invited to begin at once correcting up lists of city and state osteopaths to facilitate this work. Please do not wait to be solicited individually, but lend us a helping hand and by the first of the year we will promise the profession to present a directory under whose auspices the American Osteopathic Association that all will be proud of.

Franterally,
HENRY STANHOPE BUNTING, D. O., Editor,

The Long Search of Dr. Curtis Was Not Vain

Mt. Vernon, Ill., July 25.
DEAR DR. BUNTING—

I have just read your article in "Osteopathic Health" for August entitled, "Do You Know Why Osteopathy Cures," and I think it is decidedly the most unique and convincing explanation of Osteopathy for general distribution that I have ever read. For a long time I have been looking for something that would make the public understand the simplicity, the faithfulness and simplicity, of something much better than I could write myself; but I have never yet seen just what I wanted until I read this article. To my mind it is as near ideal as it is possible to get a definition of Osteopathy for the lay reader.

FREDERICK G. CURTIS, D. O.

Dr. Reagan Believes "Bloodless Surgery" is the Right Phrase

KNOIGHTOWN, IND., AUG. 23.

The September number of "Osteopathic Health," is, I think, one of the best editors I have seen, containing, as it does, "The Osteopathic Catechism," I wish to double my order. About the hardest job I have is to tell just what Osteopathy is without making a long, tiresome explanation and "O. H." is always an easy refuge in such a plight. I hand it to my inquirer in concluding a brief talk, saying, "this little magazine explains just what we are discussing fully, and does it even better than I can do it myself, without going into great details either. I believe we would do well to adopt for our magazine the explanatory term of "bloodless surgery." That tells much about our system without inculcating any errors that have to be overcome later.

Fraterally yours,
THOMAS EDGAR REAGAN.
New York have shifted the attack upon Osteopathy to the Board of Regents, which, under the university laws of the state of New York, has the power to pass upon all medical colleges, and say whether or not they come up to the legal requirements. The Board of Regents had but recently ruled on the Atlantic College that it was not legally incorporated under the New York laws, and had granted its diploma-granting authority to come to an end, its commencement illegally. An attack was begun in the courts upon technicalities, which the busy practitioners behind the institution were not disposed to take time from their money necessary to fight. Secretary J. W. Banning was arrested August 4 at the instance of the Erie County Medical Society for an alleged misdemeanor committed by medical men who were not regularly chartered, and the outcome of his case is yet in doubt.

The assistant district attorney claims that the certificate filed in the office of the secretary of state by the Atlantic College when it removed from another state is insufficient to comply with the university law of the state. Dr. Banning was released in bonds of $1,000 for a hearing August 31st.

The action of the A. S. O. people in absorbing the Atlantic College of Osteopathy is not, therefore, in forming a trust in Osteopathic education, but was a plainly friendly accommodation to our busy Buffalo Osteopaths by way of saving them the annoyance of sustaining an organization adequate for already embroiled in costly litigation. It likewise is a move by the parent college to keep up the standards of Osteopathic college work. This denominationalism is also in harmony with a prediction made in "The O. P." over a year ago that one or more of the eastern schools would ere long consolidate with the parent college.

Southern School Is Not Dead

When President R. W. Bowling, of the Southern School of Osteopathy, Franklin, Kentucky, sold out his institution to the projectors of the new Still College at Des Moines, and made a contract transferring his services and such students as he could carry to the Des Moines institution, it was commonly supposed that our southern institution was officially dead. Such proves not to be the case—yet not, at any rate, and from what was said at the recent Dr. Collier meeting by Dr. Collier and others who remain behind the school, it is not only reorganized, reincorporated, and very much alive, but in better shape than before. These same people rallied and never seeing the necessity of doing before when they found the school about to leave, and a fund of $10,000 was subscribed. Hon. W. J. Gooch, the business manager, is said to be a hustler, and the students and alumni are said to be determined to make the school live and prosper. Dr. J. Earle Collier is spoken of to succeed Dr. Bowling. W. J. Gooch, Gerald T. Finn, W. H. Bryan and B. F. Gardner are the main incorporators, and the capital stock is $10,000. Everybody speaks of Dr. Elam's departure as a great loss to the college, but says that his going caused a reawakening of support which leaves the institution in even a better position than before.

Still College Buys Old Property

As has been expected for some time, the backers of the new Still College of Osteopathy at Des Moines have purchased the property formerly belonging to the S. S. Still College and Infirmary of Osteopathy in Locust street, Des Moines. The A. S. O. people who recently acquired their property offered it for sale at a bargain price to the new college backers more than once, and it had begun to look as if it would go begging for a buyer. However, the capitalist, Mr. F. M. Hubbell, one of the backers of the Thompson-Carpenter institution, rallied about August 12th and paid $25,000 for the property. He expects to derive as rental from the new college a fair rate of interest on this investment, as well as having taxes and insurance maintained, giving the college the option of buying the property at the actual purchase price any time it may get the money. Work will begin by advanced students in the new institution September 4. The Iowa newspapers say that Dr. C. W. Johnson, of Boone, Iowa, has been selected for the chair of osteopaths. The new institution has issued a college bulletin called "To-day in Osteopathy."

Final Line Up at the Pacific College

The final transfer of Colonel A. B. Shaw, Dr. H. W. Forbes and Dr. and Mrs. C. H. Spencer, from Des Moines to the Pacific College of Osteopathy has finally come about, but not in any degree in the manner at first heralded by trumpet as a sort of "bolting" down of the western school whole by the Iowa contingent. The Colonel Shaw party did not buy four-fifths of the stock for $40,000, as given out, nor at any other price. Indeed, the Iowans did not buy a controlling interest, or any interest whatever, it appears, but after a good deal of bluff and bluster, and finding a directorate at Los Angeles that could not be stampeded, they were content to tie up their services for three years on a commission basis, their tenure of office depending upon satisfaction being felt by the old school authorities meanwhile.

There was considerable opera bouffe in the deal before this arrived at. Catalogue was issued from Des Moines about six weeks ago purporting to be the tenth annual catalogue of the Pacific College of Osteopathy, for which the college does not stand, and which was promptly superseded by the regular catalogue issued by the College with the authority of the trustees. Of course this struck outsiders as being a bit funny, to say the least.

"Colonel Shaw and his friends have not bought out the Pacific School, and are not in control of it," said Dr. Clement A. Whiting, chairman of the faculty, "and will not be in control of it. We believe they are good, hard workers, sincere and capable, and upon their urgent request we have taken them in and made a place for them. We will give them every opportunity and encouragement to do good work, and hope that their coming to us will be fraught with much good to the osteopathic education and to our institution. It can be said emphatically, however, that the stockholders and faculty will not stand for commercializing the Pacific College, and if necessity be generally understood that the institution has not changed hands or undergone any revolutionary changes.

Dr. Wm. E. Meachin, for seven years professor of anatomy at the A. S. O., has accepted the chair of anatomy at the Pacific College.

Among Those Not Present

Some familiar faces and strong voices were missed from the Denver meeting. Dr. C. M. Turner Hulett, who has become one of our institutions, so to speak, was absent, owing to the sickness of his wife. Dr. Charles Hazzard had not returned from a trip to Panama, whither he went as the physician of a high government official. Dr. and Mrs. Sidney A. Ellis are traveling in Europe. Dr. and Mrs. Achorn, of Boston, and Dr. and Mrs. Whitcomb, of Brooklyn, were not present this year. Dr. Melvin, of Chicago, was detained at the last minute. Dr. H. H. Gravelt, of Piqua, Ohio, another trustee, was not on hand. Neither were Dr. Wilfred L. Harris, Walter J. Novering, M. W. Pressly, O. J. Snyder and a lot of others from the far ends. Still, the west was well represented, the attendance was excellent, and, to make up for the familiar faces not there, all were pleased to see new faces and to feel the impetus of much blood in the organization. New workers are coming into the organization right along, and it is the best sign of the future for the A. O. A. that new recruits take hold of association affairs so easily, while the old and tried 'deck hands' hang on and continue to render substantial services for which experience and loyalty have well fitted them to perform.
THE OSTEOPATHIC PHYSICIAN

Program as it was Enacted at the Denver Meeting

THERE were some modifications in the program at the Denver meeting as the same was announced, owing to the absence of some who could not attend the necessary meetings, which developed into telegraphing and inverting other features, while a few were omitted altogether. We are beginning to learn that it is a mistake to frame up such crowded programs at professional meetings and we predict that the Denver meeting will be the last where it will be attempted to discuss so many subjects. Power fevers, better discussed, with more attention to clinics and the free debating of professional issues such as legislation, education, ethics and association building would interest the societaries more and, we believe, prove more profitable.

In line with this idea several Osteopaths are recommending that the papers prepared be printed in one volume each, while the Association Journal be used for other papers and matter not heard at the annual meetings. A few even advocate that the papers prepared for the national meeting be so printed even without being read before the meeting, on the theory that other so-called "live" discussions and abundant clinics would entertain the profession better and afford them more profit, since the "heavy" discussions could then be read at home quietly throughout the year and be given more minute attention.

However that might be, we have undoubtedly passed the climax of too prolife programs, and will next year try to make day by day double up as much as possible; we will doubtlessly inaugurate a change in the direction of conciseness. It would really have required two extra days to have carried out the program as originally scheduled for the Denver meeting.

The program as rendered was full of interesting things, notwithstanding, and the necessary hurry to pass along over the ground was the chief regret felt by the membership. This was the program as carried out by the ninth annual meeting of the American Osteopathic Association at Denver, August 14-19, 1905.

Fourth Prize—Dr. Clark's Gynecology

Fifth Prize—Dr. Tasker's Principles

Sixth Prize—Dr. Hulet's Principles

Seventh Prize—Dr. Hassard's Practice

Eighth Prize—Dr. McConnell's Practice
Dr. Louis Burns, South Pasadena, California. Essay, "That Cold in the Head," which appeared in the February, 1905, number of "Osteopathic Health."

Ninth Prize—Helmer & Merton's Anatomical-Osteopathic Charts
Dr. Arthur Still Craig, Iowa City, Iowa. Essay, "New Methods Cure Eye and Ear Troubles," which appeared in the August, 1905, issue of "Osteopathic Health."

Tenth Prize—Dr. Higgins' Muscles and Arteries
Dr. C. A. Broach, Atlanta, Georgia. Essay, "La Gripee Can Be Cured," which appeared in the March, 1905, number of "Osteopathic Health."

The committee of awards were Dr. Edwin Martin Downing, of York, Penn., and Dr. Dain L. Tasker, of Los Angeles, Calif.—winners of the first two prizes in 1904—and the editor of "Osteopathic Health." Fully forty essays were entered in the contest for 1905, and a half dozen not awarded prizes ran close races for places in the first ten. Quite a number of the essays entered in the contest for 1905, and a half dozen not awarded prizes ran close races for places in the first ten. Quite a number of the essays not awarded prizes have or will later appear in the pages of "Osteopathic Health."

This competitive essay feature, instituted by the Osteopathic Publishing Company four years ago, has done a good deal to stimulate the explanation of Osteopathy in popular, terse form. It has gone about obtaining new methods and has on many occasions been a great addition to any osteopathic treatment room, as well as being of much use to anyone who wants to express himself concisely and clearly.

"Hilo" Has a Future if Pushed
Dr. L. H. McCarty, of Xenia, Ohio, had the "Hilo" table on exhibition at the East Clinic Room at the Denver meeting. It was critically examined by members of the profession, and was pronounced ideal for an expensive table. Its features of elevating, lowering and tilting can be readily secured by a child, even when two persons are on the table. The electric company's ad. in "The O. P." is one of the essays offered by "Osteopathic Health" for the best of the profession in representing Osteopathy popularly, and was won by Dr. Arthur Still Craig, of Iowa City, Iowa. These charts were closely examined by many "Osteopathic Health" readers, and was won by Dr. Arthur Still Craig, of Iowa City, Iowa. These charts were closely examined by many D. O.'s, who gave a unanimous opinion that they would be a great addition to any osteopathic treatment room.

"Peerless" Was at Denver
The Electrical Specialty Manufacturing Company, of Allentown, Pa., means to secure the confidence and patronage of the osteopathic profession and it has been shown that any city in the right way to get it. This is the concern which has on the market the "Peerless Special" direct-illumination endoscopes, which is so perfectly adapted to excision and removal of the inner cavities of the "Darkest Africa's" of mucous cavities in the human system. You, of course, have heard of the company's ad. in "The O. P." President J. A. L. Horton determined to the excellence of his electric specula and attachments before the Osteopaths directly, so he commissioned Mr. Dunlap, of the home office, and William H. Allen, D. O., a director in his company, resident in Allentown, to attend the big Denver meeting and exhibit the workings of his machine. It proved just what it is represented to be—portable, efficient, dependable and warm prase for this aid to examinations were heard from all who saw the exhibit conducted by Mr. Dunlap. A number of instruments were sold, and there seems to be no reason to doubt that this instrument will supplant all other endoscopes for the favor of Osteopathy. Its various features proclaim it to be the best in very many ways.
After the close of the convention the editor of "The O. P." was tendered a banquet at the Adams by the Sigma Alpha Epilson Alumni Association, of Denver. Having established the first chapter of his college fraternity in Colorado at the state university in 1896, this is a pleasant little formality which always awaits him when he visits that city. Fifty were present, including representatives from the chapters at the State University, Denver University and the Colorado School of Mines.

Dr. Andrew Taylor Still ran a narrow risk of being injured on his way to Denver, as his train was in a smash-up in Kansas. He sustained a neck strain only, which, however, made him feel so sick that he left Denver for home before the meeting ended. While in Denver, he was the guest of Dr. and Mrs. Bolles. Upon taking his departure suddenly he sent word to the convention that he was feeling a good deal like being a homeopath since the shake-up, and he guessed he "would go home to ma."

"How to the line, let ship fall where they will."

Dr. Bessie Duffield, of Nashville, Tennessee, did the yellowstone after the Denver meeting. Dr. J. W. Manning didn’t look like a man out on bonds as he trod the tile floors of the Brown Palace.

Dr. and Mrs. K. W. Kaufman and daughter went on to the Portland fair and other points on the coast after the convention.

Dr. Harry P. Whitcomb did the convention returning from California, where he has sojourned for six months, to his Vermont home.

Dr. C. W. Young set a record for mountain climbing in bare feet when on the Moffat road excursion. He is a sort of back-to-nature man, you know.

When going through so many tunnels on one of our Denver side trips, Dr. N. Alden Bolles ventured the remark that Osteopathy had never been run in the ground so much before.

Dr. F. P. Young fell a victim to altitude upon reaching Denver, and, developing a fever and other annoying symptoms, left for home without waiting for the adjournment of the convention.

Dr. and Mrs. George M. Laughlin and Dr. and Mrs. E. C. Link, of Kirkville, formed a party which toured Yellowstone Park and visited the Portland exhibit before reaching the convention.

Dr. Ellen Barret Ligon and Mrs. Ralph G. Richmond, of mobile, went up Pike’s Peak and continued their journey westward to various Oregon and Washington points before returning south.

Dr. and Mrs. Henry Stanhope Bunting were accompanied to Denver by their mothers, Mrs. Christie S. Bunting, of Kansas City, and Mrs. H. D. C. Van Asmus, of Grand Rapids, Mich.

The party spent two weeks visiting at Manitou Springs and other points, taking the various scenic trips in eastern Colorado.

The Denver meeting was festive with three bridal couples in attendance: Dr. and Mrs. J. C. Rule, of Stockton, California, who were married just before the meeting at the bride’s home, Dixon, Illinois, and Dr. and Mrs. J. D. Cunningham, of Eddington, Illinois, who were married in Denver a day or two before the convention opened, and Dr. and Mrs. J. H. Hook, of Fruita, Colo., also newly wed; yet, strangely enough, nobody threw any rice, either.

Nobody had a better time at Denver than Mrs. Ambrose P. Hibbs, of Salt Lake City, who, with her little boy, accompanied Dr. Hibbs. Mrs. Hibb’s old home being Kirkville, it is easy to understand how many happy reunions she enjoyed. “Bishop” Hibbs himself—as his Mormon patients now call him—looks fine after his court and legislative battles, and is truly our “big man” in Utah.
D R. JOHN T. BASS, of Denver, the new first vice president of the American Association, has won for himself in medical, court and legislative circles in Colorado the name of "the Osteopathic Tartar." This title is applied to him because he is a "hit-back fighter," who has never yet been defeated, either in open combat or in ambush.

Dr. Bass is a direct descendant of the old Osteopaths who have been led into court for slaughter by the "regulars." That was in September, 1902. Judge Carpenter was a man of fine humor. Dr. Bass was acquitted, and again a Colorado court affirmed that the practice of Osteopathy was not the practice of medicine.

Second blood for Dr. John T. Second knock-down for Van Meter. Third decision favorable to Osteopathy in Colorado.

Dr. Bass had his dander up now, and he concluded he would be let alone, or find out if a life devoted to doing good was worth living.

Osteopathy in Japan

Karmazawa, Japan, July 24.

We are up in this little mountain town for a vacation during the hot weather of July and August at Tokyo, but as this is a favorite resort for the foreigners, we are not having much rest. It is very cool and delightful here.

You were right in supposing the remittance was to apply on Osteopathic Health. Kindly change next issue to this place. We could not get along without "The O. P.," either. It puts us back into the world of Osteopathy each month, and makes us forget the dreary leagues of sea that divide us from the profession.

We expect to send in a number of votes for Dr. A. T. Still for the Noble prize at an early date. We have made many true friends for Osteopathy here in Japan.

Praternally yours,

California Has Happy Meeting

The fourth annual session of the California Osteopathic Association was a hummer. From the address of welcome of President T. W. Sheldow to the close it was full of dash and spirit. Clinics and good papers were enjoyed; among those on the programme being Dr. Ernest Sisson, Warren Taylor, J. J. Pearce, Isaac Burke, T. W. Sheldon, William Horace Iovie, Dani L. Tasker, W. J. Hayden, Clement A. Whiting, and B. P. Shepard. The new officers elected are: President, Dr. Ernest Sisson, president; Dr. W. L. Emery, first vice president; Dr. C. F. Ford, second vice president; Dr. Effie York, secretary; Dr. S. D. Cooper, treasurer; Dr. C. A. Haines, T. W. Sheldon, Agnes G. Madden, D. L. Tasker and A. C. Moore, trustees. Drs. Irvie and Tasker were chosen to represent the association at the national convention at Denver.

In the evening 100 members and their friends gathered at the banquet at the Occidental Hotel. President, S. H. Sturges of the local college, acted as toastmaster, and was greeted with eloquent and witty responses. Among the toasts especially interesting were "Our Association," by Dr. E. Sisson; "Father of Osteopathy, Dr. Still," by C. A. Moore, "Pacific College of Osteopathy," by Dr. C. A. Whiting; "California College of Osteopathy," by Dr. Effie York; "Woman's Work in Osteopathy," by Dr. Etta C. Wakefield; "Osteopathic Pioneering in California," by Dr. D. L. Tasker, and "Our Fledglings," by Dr. F. B. Teter.

Novel Souvenirs Proved Popular

"The O. P. Company's" convention souvenirs were received with the liveliest evidences of appreciation at Denver. The button, a cut of which is shown here-with, was in four colors-the top half border in red, the lower half border in green—the colors used in "Osteopathic Health"'s color schemes—black upon a white center-ground appeared the genial countenance of Dr. A. T. Still in his now celebrated fur-cap picture of midwinter. Around the border appeared in white letters this motto:

ALL THE YEAR AROUND— "OSTEOPATHIC HEALTH."

The other souvenir was a miniature carpen-ter's plane, with a steel blade that was supposed to be a pencil sharpener. It came packed in a tight little paper box, like any prize package, and bore upon its face:

Then, surely, you ought to have that book. It is Dr. E. H. Pratt's "Composite Man," of which the Fourth Edition is now ready. It consists of fourteen anatomical impersonations illustrated by an Osteopath, and each impersonation is illustrated by a figure in color. It is unique in style, but presents its subject in a most entertaining and instructive fashion. Its opening chapter on "The Bony Man" is meat for the Osteopath.

Massachusetts College Two-Year Course

THE Massachusetts College of Osteopathy, Boston, Mass., was one of the earliest osteopathic educational institutions organized, being founded in 1892, and is one of the seven Osteopathic schools at present in operation recognized by the American Osteopathic Association and by states legalizing the practice of Osteopathy. It was established in Boston, the educational center of the United States, as the pioneer in New England of the science of Osteopathy, which science was hardly known in that section at that time.

By perseverance in distribution of osteopathic literature and sending accomplished practitioners into the field, an educational campaign has been conducted resulting in a demand for osteopathic physicians in New England towns far in excess of the facility of the schools to supply. It has thus created a demand which it is now ready to meet by educating an increased number in the science of Osteopathy.

The equipment of the college has been gradually enlarged, the corps of instructors increased, and facilities for extending the course improved. It was the first osteopathic school to extend its course to three years; it was the first to require advanced educational qualifications for admission; and is the one school at present having only regular three-year-course students enrolled.

The abundance of clinical material from a densely populated city makes the situation ideal for an osteopathic college.

Two A. S. O. graduates of June, 1904—Dr. John A. MacDonald, No. 39 Huntington avenue, and Dr. A. F. McWilliams, No. 356 Massachusetts avenue, Boston—were in the February class of the Massachusetts college, and graduated as three-year men. Three-year graduates are as yet rare enough to make this quite a professional distinction.

THE "Catechism" in September

O MANY requests have been received the past year to repeat the "Osteopathic Catechism," which proved so popular in "Osteopathic Health" in 1901, that we have complied by republishing it in our September number. It has been carefully revised and condensed, and beyond any question makes an exceptionally happy and convincing campaign document.

This article is a matter-of-fact every-day talk, such as is passed between the Osteopathic practitioner and his callers every day in the year. Questions are asked which the public ask; others which patients ask—some of them, too, rather foolish, as that query so often put to us: "Is Osteopathy a cure only for diseases of the bone?"—and all are answered intelligently, pointedly and "understandably," so that he who runs may not only read, but comprehend satisfactorily.

How many people want to know "if you have to believe in it to be benefited?" This tells them. How many would take our treatment but for understanding that it is "too rough" for their constitutions? This corrects that delusion—nay, slander. How many women dread the painful ordeal they imagine necessary to be gone through with in being treated stark naked? This corrects that foolish idea, also. So other vital, if also elementary, truths are made plain to the people in this copyrighted article from the pen of the editor.

Matters of anatomical and physiological education are also put forward with a simple charm of recital that is instructive, while seeming to be only entertaining. The wonderful truths of the body as a complex machine; the parallel of the nervous system to an electric power system; the parallel of the blood and lymph system to the city’s water and sewer systems are portrayed with graphic interest. It is certain that any intelligent person who is the least bit interested in science, health or common knowledge will not put this story down without reading from cover to cover, and many will preserve this magazine to read again and again—and then hand over to others.

Terms are defined, too, which you oldest patients will find delight in studying. "Lesion," "inhibition," "stimulation," "vaso-nutrition," "health," "disease," etc. —all are explained adequately but briefly.

It is a good number to use any month in the year. We have only printed 10,000 copies in excess of our usual edition for September, and over half that supply has been absorbed by "repeat orders" from patrons who decided to use extra quantities as soon as they saw this number. We do not believe the supply will last to become a back number, and we shall not run another edition.

How many September magazines do you want?

P. S. Here is a quick way to get "The Catechism"—write to "Osteopathic Health," Des Moines, Iowa.

in proper channels. "Osteopathic Health" has made them by the thousand in the cities and hamlets of this union. It is still doing it every day and night of the year, and will continue doing it until the world is Osteopathic to the core.

It is one of the chief missions of "Osteopathic Health"—the doctor's patients; makes them intelligent, convincing, and uncom­querable missionaries for our system—and for their own doctor in particular; and fits them to "advertise" the good work credibly and eth­ically and bring in new recruits. Of course the patients get all the credit for doing the work in those cases usual, and will give a good monthly diet to them, and all, and let each assimilate according to his needs.

The way to do it is to send "Osteopathic Health" regularly every month to one's entire list of former patients—keep as many as possible alert in their interest and active in spreading the good news among their friends. Keep another supply on the office center table, and teach your patients to help themselves, and be sure they know that they are welcome to carry off a free copy as they like to their friends. Never let the current supply get entirely exhausted. Remember the old rule of being a selection of the most helpful and answer form of the things people commonly wish to know about Osteopathy. We are paying our most helpful pieces of Osteopathic literature every printed. You cannot make a mistake to distribute it generously and lay in a stock for future demands as well.

Here are some of the questions answered:

What is Osteopathy?
What does the word mean?
Does Osteopathy teach that the bones are usually diseased?
Do you prescribe drugs as a cure?
What is the best method of nutrition?
What agencies do Osteopaths use to restore health?
Is Osteopathy massage?
Is it indolent in treating women?
Do you use too much treatment?
What is disease?
What is accident?
What is the disease of every disease?
What are the first causes of disease?
What is the treatment of them?
What are acute diseases?
What are chronic diseases?
Has the body its own defense?
What is a "female"?
What is dilatation and inhalation?
Can Osteopathy reduce fevers?
Is every case treated the same thing?
Is it a rough treatment?
Order at once, the supply will not last to become a stock number in all likelihood.
